ABOUT FÊU

The title is like a manifesto, short, evocative, channelling at once the primitive energy of this uncontrollable natural element, and the primal warmth around which we assemble, seeking to reaffirm our own humanity. In 2018, in Näss (People), Boussouf featured and focused on an ensemble of seven male dancers, linked through rhythms to some ancestral land. Five years later, he sought inspiration in his Moroccan childhood – and beyond that, in the ancient beginnings of time itself – choosing this time an ensemble of ten female dancers, an homage to the exclusively female-centric environment of his early years. Then, prolonging the power of the cyclical movements introduced in 2022 in the video installation Burn to shine, created with the plastician Ugo Rondinone at the Petit Palais in Paris, the choreographer explored the spatial and rhythmic elements of the circle, the embodiment of the regenerating impulse, the loop. Here he focused on the strong physicality of the dancers' bodies, which is driven by a telluric instinct, a haunting, unending movement. We see onstage this intense collective experience, the power of these women embracing the 360° range of movements, of traveling through the space. The women use their hybrid vocabulary of hip hop and contemporary dance, creating and re-creating a constantly evolving stage landscape, flowing, never stopping or starting. They were chosen by Boussouf for their personalities as well as their technical strengths, supported by powerful drumming, and together they create a spirited group, proud of its differences, borne on a wave of fire as breath and as a purifying force. In this perpetual present we discover a joyful space-time, where a performance deliberately free of aesthetic affection presents the true essence of organic group communion with the earth. It is perhaps not a coincidence that this promise of life is presented to us by a group of women ...

FÊU [SMALL VERSION]

Fêu can also be performed in 360°, with a reduced number of performers, outdoors or in venues not dedicated to live performance. Performed for the first time in this configuration at the Nuit des musées on May 18, 2024, Fêu [small version] is designed to adapt to any space, allowing the audience to move around the stage. An immersive experience, up close and personal with the dancers and their energy!

OUTREACH ACTIVITIES

The creations of Fouad Boussouf are a vibrant blending of hip hop, contemporary and traditional dance. A teacher as much as he is a choreographer, he prioritizes communication and transmission in both areas of his work. Each piece is conceived with an obligatory accompanying set of practical workshops offered to all audiences. These workshops allow us to better understand the works, to continue the experience of the spectator beyond the performance, and to enrich that experience. Fêu is not the exception to this policy, and can be experienced in a number of ways.

Objectives for our audiences:

- ▶ Facilitate the discovery of the choreographic and aesthetic universes of Fouad Boussouf,
- ▶ Initiate the audiences into the lexicon and practices of live performance, specifically those used in dance,
- ▶ Offer perspectives on the creative process and experimentation with audiences already familiar with dance, including beginning dancers,
- ▶ Propose feedback time at the end of long form workshops or an audiovisual validation relevant to a creation.

These ideas will apply to all audiences but may be adapted depending on levels of understanding, notably for amateur dancers and for changing objectives in teaching.

The modules :

Workshops will be led by one of the dancers from Fêu or by other dancers from Le Phare - CCN du Havre Normandie. Various modules are possible, ranging from two hours of discovery to more structured projects lasting through an entire season. The two hour format is largely sufficient to discover a choreographic universe, begin moving and creating a pleasing group dynamic, but longer lasting sessions are proposed to anticipate more detailed study and experiences, with additional feedback.

We are willing to customize our formats depending on audiences, theatres, any expressed wishes, and our availability.

This piece is accessible with an audio description with collaboration of AccèsCulture.

LIVE MACHINE

UNFALL

Charlotte Rousseau and François Caffenne

Charlotte Rousseau and François Caffenne are composers for contemporary dance, and desire to set bodies in motion, they create in November 2023, for the opening of the PLEIN PHARE IN 2nd edition festival, the duo UNFALL. Programmed at the end of the show, the audience kept the Fire energy and deployed it in turn.

Influenced by rock, electro and cinematic music, the duo distills a physical and powerful techno.

UNFALL's live performance mixes deep bass, analog synthesizers and percussive rhythms, a music that is dense to feel, and invites you to take over the dancefloor.

Duration : 60 minutes

*“The rising tension,
the force driving them
toward a trance-like state, the ten of them like witches driven to madness.”*

Philippe Verrière, Dansercanalhistorique

“[...] the fire is also the flames which valiantly affirm their independence on the very edges of the ensemble. The choreography of Fouad Bousouf takes this dialectic into account, playing the single and the multiple against each other, offering the dancers solos, thanks to which they may slide into the group as much as they may fly away from it.

The same thing happens with the music of François Caffenne, veering from one aesthetic to another; Fouad Bousouf’s choreographic vocabulary is drawn from a variety of sources, allowing each dancer to show herself as an individual and as a member of a conjoined group. Fêu brilliantly relays the hypnotic nature of these flames we see flickering in the hearth, we cannot turn our eyes away.”

Julia Wahl, Cult.news

“This is a revitalizing piece, focusing as it does on the brute force, the vital impulses driving us from our roots. A work which speaks to our bodies, tells us about our history, our past, but also our present, the joy of living, of moving. Feeling alive in our own bodies, moving to confirm our existence, dancing to live. We reconnect with the terrestrial forces of nature in a primal blossoming of our senses. Music, movement, joy. This is a piece which is profoundly joyful, open to life and the dynamic of life itself – something not currently found in other works right now.”

theatredublog.com

“As in his previous creations, Fouad Bousouf pushes his dancers beyond their physical limits. And the ten dancers he chose roar right back. The ten of them, all incredible, throw themselves into this battle with spirit. Even when exhausted and breathless they throw themselves back into the fray for a final push, pulled between the desire to fly and the temptation to melt back into the protective group cocoon. With their hair swinging in all directions, sweeping the floor or whipping the air like victorious banners, they fill this piece with an exhilarating power.”

Claudie Colozzi, L’œil d’Olivier

“The fierce energy of these women, seemingly warriors or temple guardians [...] wipes out everything in its way, persuading us with its commitment and authenticity.”

BIOGRAPHY

Fouad Boussof - Choreographer

For Fouad Boussof, dance is pure impulse, momentum, movement. These words also define his artistic journey, driven by his innate curiosity and his desire to escape. His early years in Morocco, living in an isolated village in the region of Moulay Idriss, were filled with festive family events and a natural environment of clean, monastic simplicity. When Fouad was seven, his family moved to France, to Romilly-sur-Seine, near Troyes, and he stepped into a new universe, in which he had to learn quickly about culture and societal codes. As a teenager he began doing hip hop to cassettes by Prince and Michael Jackson; the form was initially considered a socially acceptable physical exercise, but for him hip hop became the building blocks for his personal style of movement, in which the body's will to exceed, to go farther – brought him recognition from his peers.

He finished his education in Chalons-en-Champagne, where he also took workshops led by the circus students from the CNAC (the National Center for Circus Arts). He moved to Paris in 2000 and began studying social sciences at the University of Paris XII in Créteil, where he also taught classes in street dance, first informally, then as an accredited teacher. He continued studying at the Academy of the Cité Véron, participated in the Suresnes Cités Danse Festival and performed with Farid Berki and Pierre Doussaint. After having presented his DESS degree on hip hop, he took a seven month road trip in Australia, beginning a long cycle of activities layering pedagogical, creative and travel plans, which also took him to Egypt and to Russia. When he finally returned to France he decided to focus on dance, and at the age of 27 he founded the Compagnie Massala. In 2008- 2009 he created solos and a trio, and in 2010 he created his first group work, Déviations (Detours).

Since then he has been creating non-stop, embodying the momentum that has characterized his approach to his art and his life. His work is hybrid, deliberately without labels, profoundly present and in the moment, always incorporating the hip hop movement vocabulary. Over the years he has built a dance language channeling movement spontaneity and the idea of nonstop movement, which has no beginning, no ending. His dancers are inspired by this dynamic which sets them outside their normal movement patterns, generating an extraordinary, cyclical energy onstage, notably in his recent works Näss (People) in 2018, and in Oüm (2020), an homage to Oum Kalthoum – which affirmed his place in the international dance scene.

For Boussof, the principal artistic instrument is the body, of course, but he also incorporates other forms, including video and the plastic arts, both contemporary or linked to Mediterranean history. Among these works are the documentary film, Le Ballet Urbain (The Urban Ballet) (2019), and his collaborations with the sculptor Ugo Rondinone, on the video installation Burn to shine (2022) at the Petit Palais in Paris and in Via (2023), which he created for the Ballet du Grand Théâtre in Geneva, commissioned by the choreographer Sidi Larbi Cherkaoui. This "world citizen" follows a rhythm of creation driven by emotion, the concept of risk, and the constant will to move forward.

From 2020- 2022, Boussof was an Associated Artist at the prestigious Maison de la danse in Lyon, at Équinoxe - Scène nationale de Châteauroux and at the Maison de la musique in Nanterre. On January 1, 2022, He was unanimously appointed as director of Le Phare - Centre chorégraphique national du Havre Normandie and during that year was also honored by the French government with the distinction of Chevalier des Arts et des Lettres.

Girls of Fêu

Fouad Boussouf brought together 10 young females dancers, between 22 and 31 years old, from all places and formations. Some come from hip-hop, such as Fiona Pitz, Rose Edjaga or Valentina Rigo, who regularly compete in battles. Some of them went through Les Ballets to train, such as Charlène Pons, Justine Tourillon and Léa Deschaintres with the Ballet Junior de Genève. Others have practiced and studied in conservatories, such as Serena Bottet who graduated from the Conservatoire Supérieur National de Lyon or Manon Prapotnich who comes to us from the Conservatoire du Grand Avignon. Lola Lefèvre trained in Austria at the Salzburg Experimental Academy of Dance after a career between dance and circus. Filipa Correia Lescuyer also cut her teeth abroad. She learned dance in the Netherlands, New York and Israel, and danced for many well-known choreographers, including Olivier Dubois, as well as Justine and Léa. Each of them, thanks to their many experiences and different life paths, gives a singular character to the piece, creating a lively and unique chorus.

François Caffenne - Composer

A self-taught artist, François Caffenne began working in 1999 as a stage manager for theatre companies in Lyon (Turak Théâtre and Le Grabuge) while maintaining his interest in both music and dance. In 2004, he composed his first soundtrack for the presentational procession for the Lyon Dance Biennial in the city of Riorges, which he repeated in 2006. In 2005 he met Dominique Boivin, for whom he wrote music for À quoi tu penses? (What are you thinking about?) and for whom he created soundtracks for Don Quichotte (Don Quixote) in 2009 and Travelling in 2011. In 2006, he worked with Olivier Dubois, for whom he created the soundtrack for his solo Pour tout l'or du monde (For all the gold in the world), then in 2007 for Dubois' Révolution with his take on the famous Boléro by Maurice Ravel. Beginning in 2010, he began creating most of the original music for the choreographer's works : Spectre for the Ballets de Monte Carlo (2010), Rouge (Red), Dubois' 2nd solo (2011), Tragédie (Tragedy) which was presented at the Avignon Festival (2012), Souls (2013), Elégie (Elegy) for the National Ballet of Marseille (2013), Les mémoires d'un seigneur (Memoirs of a Lord) (2015), Auguri (Wishes) presented at the Lyon Dance Biennial (2016), De l'origine (Of the origin) for the Royal Swedish Ballet (2017) and Tropisme (Tropism), presented in 2019 at the Séquence Danse du 104 Festival in Paris. He continues to work with Olivier Dubois, and since 2020 has also collaborated with Kaori Ito and since 2022 with Filipe Lourenço.

Gwladys Duthil - Costumer

Having earned a degree in the fields of costuming/ directing, Gwladys Duthil went to train at Ensatt in costume design. She designed costumes for many theatre directors, among them Jérémy Ridet, Audrey Bonnefoy, Carole Thibaut, Pauline and Angèle Peyrade, the Collectif Nightshot, Gabriel Dufay, Denis Guénoun and Stanislas Roquette. Recently she designed costumes for En attendant les barbares (Waiting for the barbarians) after J. M. Coetzee, by Camille Bernon and Simon Bourgade for the Comédie-Française, in 2021 at the Théâtre du Vieux-Colombier, then the costumes of LWA, which premiered in 2022 at the Théâtre Paris Villette. Also in 2022 she designed the costumes for Précieuses Ridicules (Precious ridiculous) directed by Sébastien Pouderoux and Stéphane Varupenne of the Comédie Française, performed at the Théâtre du Vieux Colombier to celebrate the 400th anniversary of Molière's birth. At the opera, she assisted the costumer Julia Hansen on works directed by Mariame Clément. She also works for the circus, notably with Maroussia Diaz Verbeke, Justine Bertillot and Juan Ignacio Tula. She designed costumes for the choreographer Fouad Boussouf for Happy, the opening event for the Paris Summer Festival 2021 presented at the Louvre Museum, then for his pieces Âmes (Souls) and Cordes (Ropes) in 2022.

Lucas Baccini - Lighting designer

After studying music, Lucas Baccini became interested in theatre sound, then in theatrical lighting, working at the Theatre 13 vents (CDN de Montpellier). His career as a lighting director includes, among others, the Montpellier Dance Festival, La Vignette, the Compagnie Yann Lheureux, the Compagnie Groupe Noces (Florence Bernard), and the Compagnie Massala (Fouad Boussouf). In 2016 he created the Compagnie Noir Titane with Christel Claude. Then, Maxime Cozic, from the Compagnie Felinae, asked him to create the lighting for his pieces, with a similar request from the Compagnie Ino. He explores ways to create rhythmic lighting in symbiosis with the artists in the works he is lighting. His designs are characterized by detailed communication between the choreographer, director, artists, bodies and – of course – the light.
